

RAYMOND RECORDER

VOL. 46—No. 44

THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1949.

THE VITAL QUALITY

The growing pattern of violence in labor disputes is becoming too obvious to be ignored. There was violence in the recent textile strike in Paris, Ontario, violence in many parts of the world in the past and present struggle between warring seamen unions. There has been serious violence at Asbestos, Quebec, and violence at the strike-bound Heywood-Wakefield plant at Orillia, Ontario. Violence is not an argument it must not be permitted to succeed. For a law that is openly defied or carelessly maintained discredits all law. True, the great bulk of organized workers are on of sympathy with such tactics. They recognize that there are sound laws for their protection, and a weight of public opinion on their side. Yet a few hot heads continue to force violence on a majority. We want to know why? The answer is tragically simple. Nobody—not labor's cooler heads nor the public at large nor responsible officialdom is sufficiently concerned. Labor says "Well, they may get something for me." The public says: "It isn't my business." Officialdom says: "Look at the votes involved." So we sell out our birthright of law and order.

At Asbestos there has been trouble serious trouble. The Catholic church has disapproved the precipitous strike action of a Catholic union. The Quebec government has declared the strike illegal and has sent police to maintain order. The police were man-handled, public safety was jeopardized, the Riot Act was read and numbers were arrested. And the public it took up collections for the rioters. It challenged the action of the government. "It will be the end of Duplessis", say responsible union officials who are not directly involved. Again we ask why? Because we, the people, cannot make up our minds where our loyalties lie. Why not make it up this way? Not for management. Not for labor, but for the law that is very much our business and that our carelessness is discrediting.

In Kipling's "Soldiers Three", appears the story of the "Big Drunk Draft". It might be read for the good of the soul. It tells of the "little officer boy" in charge of a draft of time-expired men—seventy five Drunk, rebellious scoundrels, spoiling for trouble and all too conscious of their rights. It was the "officer boys" decision that it was his business to do his job, forgetting of personal danger or present popularity, and even at some straining of the conventions. So he whipped that gang of rioters into the semblance of an orderly company. Doing so he maintained his own integrity and gained their respect and admiration. "It was guts", said Mulvaney. Guts it was. The quality that all men understand and respect. Isn't it time we stopped apologizing for maintaining the law? Laws we must have. Respect for law we must have. The unassailable security of law we must have. But it takes guts to maintain them.

THE FARMER

Man builds his castles, fair and high
Wherever river runneth by;
Great cities rise in every land,
Great churches show the builders hand
Great arches, monuments, and towers
Fair palaces and pleasing bowers;
Great work done, be it here or there
And well man worketh everywhere
But work or rest, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

—Charles G. Leland.

AN ADDRESS TO HIS AGING BODY

by Edward Cameron.

Now you are growing old. Your hearing and strength are failing. Your resistance to cold is diminishing. You cannot climb or run as you once could. In a word you are running down. In a short time, perhaps a year or five or ten years — you will cease to breathe and your heart will stop beating.

When you can go no farther I shall leave you and be free. When we separate I shall continue to exist. A Power greater than you or I started us on our journey. Your journey is approaching its end and you are aware of it. My journey has scarcely begun and I know it because I have never been more alive. Our separation is not one of sadness but of joy. You are weary and want to stop. I am longing to alight from this slowing vehicle and go on without you.
